Its headquarters are located in Milton Park, near Abingdon, Oxfordshire, United Kingdom. It has a development and operations center at Techno Park in Trivandrum, Kerala, India and a sales office in Brooklyn, New York, United States. [1] [2] Overview photos from USFWS Flickr stream, which was available for free with PD-mark [3] The same image, watermark and sold on its website without attributing a photographer or source[4] Alamy maintains an online archive of more than 125 million still images.[citations needed] Illustrations and hundreds of thousands of videos contributed by agencies and independent photographers or collected from archives of news, museums and national collections. Its suppliers include professional and amateur photographers, stock agencies, news archives, museums, national collections and public content copied from Wikimedia Commons. Its clients are from the photographic, publishing and advertising industries and the general public. History James West, a graduate of Edinburgh University, is ceo of Alamy and co-founded the company with Mike Fischer in 1999. Fischer, the company's current chairman and co-founder, was also co-founder and CEO of RM plc. In 2002, Alamy was awarded emma (Electronic Multimedia Awards) for technical excellence. The purpose of the award is to recognise excellence in the creation of digital media content. [5] It has also introduced a 24/7 high-resolution download tool for customers. [6] Technical innovation continued when virtual CDs became a substitute for RF image CDs. [7] In 2003, the company established an international distribution network. As a result of the resulting increased sales, it increased royalty payments to its contributors in 2006. [8] [9] Since 2002, Alamy has paid out more than $100 million to its contributors. [citation needed] In March 2004, a million images were available on the site and by October 2007 there were 10 million images online. [10] In 2010, the company created an iPad app to showcase its images. [11] In 2011, Alamy launched a live intelligence service[12] and in 2012 began receiving live mobile phone news[13] that upgraded their collection to 25 million images. [14] In the same year in 2011, the company expanded its international sales unit to include teams presented in Germany, Australia and the Middle East. In 2012, Alamy introduced Alamy IQ, video, and creative search results. [15] In 2015, the Alamy app for iPhone Stockimo was shortlisted for drum's Marketing on Mobile Awards (MOMAs) for best mobile consumer app and tablets. [16] [17] In 2017, Alamy announced its new CEO, Andy Harding. Harding. In 2018, James West continued as CEO. In December 2018, Alamy announced that it would increase its commission from 50% to 60% of the value of sales, reducing its payments to its contributors to only 40% of payments received from customers. A few weeks later, this communication was met with another announcement that the Commission would remain at 50% on material that was available exclusively to Alamy. In February 2020, Alamy was acquired by PA Media Group. [18] Co-founder James West has resigned as CEO but remains a member of the Advisory Committee. On February 16, 2015, Alamy informed its members of changes to the contributor's contract. [19] These changes have been condemned by the photo industry authorities, the National Union of Journalists[20] and Editorial Photographers UK (EPUK), who said: 'Alamy seems to be trying to create eternal and irrevocable contracts with images previously sold on our behalf at a time when this was not the case, allowing them to continue selling even after the end of their contract with the photographer. This provision would take a whole period of copyright and we see it as disproportionately extensive. [21] [22] Alamy responded by saying that the changes reflect only the working style of the company and do not represent a significant shift. [23] [24] Their response, in turn, was characterized by documentary photographer and Alamy contributor David Hoffman as misleading and evasive. Carol M. Highsmith sued Alamy in July 2016 for selling photographs without attribution that she donated to the Library of Congress. [26] [27] [28] The Licensing Compliance Service, part of Alamy, also sent an email to This is America! Foundation, a foundation that was founded by Highsmith herself. The email states: 'We have seen that an image or image (picture) represented by Alamy has been used for online use by your company. According to Alamy's records, your company does not have a valid license to use the images. [29] and demanded to pay a settlement fee of $120 for the violation Highsmith was charged. This photograph was not a violation, but an original work of authorship by Highsmith. Highsmith's claim was rejected because she had signed off her copyright, putting the photos in the public domain.
